It was where the 1/6 rally planning was taking place after Discord kicked us off. There were rooms for every state to organize and a few other rooms for rally discussion. Kind of sad you didn't know because there have been a lot of threads about it.

sounds like a way for all of us to be identified and tracked. I will have to decline. all organization needs to be done offline.

Some risks are necessary. I have no desire to go to DC, I don't like crowds, I don't like cold, I don't like traffic and I don't have the extra money to fund the trip but I feel like I have to go. That means I take on some risks including loss of property, injury and death. Getting put on a list and possibly imprisoned is just another risk I have to take. If we don't risk all that now then most of it will be a certainty soon.

Naw. using online tools is a full risk. you are fully identified at that point.

You missed the point. I don't care any more and there's no time left. Organizing a national event fully offline would take months, we had 2 of the busiest weeks of the year. Just curious if you have participated in any offline organizing to attend the 1/6 rally? Pretty sure you have not and would have an excuse to avoid if there was a local meeting. My guess is you'd say, "it's just a bunch of glowies taking names".

unfortunately. the internet is fully tracked. we are not safe doing things like this online.

ah. The matrix service is not a centralized service like most messaging services. We have end-to-end encryption set up. I see your point though. The only organization really being done online is getting together, meet up points, etc., but only vetted participants get that information.

No, I don't think so. The server could be down, or they might be working on improvements. Last time it was down like this, they were setting up the Federation, there's been talk about removing the Federation due to all the shills coming in and spamming. We've tripled the level of moderation, but they might be making some changes right now to make it more manageable.

I hope you're right but what is the federation?

Do you know what single sign-on (SSO) is? If so, the federation is pretty much a SSO.

I wasn't aware that the matrix server was such. I'm not keen.

Yeah, we had it set up a couple days ago due to a large request for it to be done, but after doing so, the amount of spammers increased dramatically.

I was logged off for the porn storm. I had created a room but made epic admin beforehand so he kept it clean.

Lucky, I was on the front lines with the ban hammer swinging for the tranny, gay, dog, horse, and cow porn. We also had racial slur spam and "EPIC APOLOGIZE" spam.

If not, SSO is an IT technology regarding user authentication. It is similar to how on thedonald.win, you can access other .win communities without having to sign in on the other .win communities. Single Sign-On (SSO) is like a single set of credentials, required once for all of the services included under the scope of the SSO. So in a sense of the .win communities example, when you sign on to thedonald.win, you only have to use your log in once to access all of the different .win communities, or if you logged in from a different .win community, you'd be able to access thedonald.win without having to create a new set of credentials or logging into thedonald.win.
